POSITIONS HELD

- 2021-Present Assistant Professor, Department of Communication Studies, Furman University
- 2019-2021 Visiting Professor, Department of Communication Studies, Furman University
- 2017-2019 Lecturer, Department of Communication Studies, Furman University
- 2007-Present Public Scholar. I am researching the intersection of revivalism and conservative politics in the twentieth century, specifically in the American South. I have travelled to archives in Illinois, Alabama, South Carolina, Florida, Tennessee, and Missouri and have collected over 170G of primary documents which will prove my case that conservative Evangelicals continue to exploit the myth of the Lost Cause.
- 2013 Instructor, Department of Communication, North Greenville University

- 1990-1992 Graduate Teaching Assistant, Division of Speech Communication, Bob Jones University

BOOKS

- 2020 White Nationalism and Faith: Statements and Counter-Statements on American Identity, (New York: Peter Lang Publishers, 2020).
- This anthology gathers texts promoting American White Nationalism since the Civil War along with those who stated resistance. William Jennings Bryan, Billy Sunday, and William Ward Ayer as well as Mitch Landrieu and Barack Obama are among the included rhetors.
- 2007 Romancing the Difference: Kenneth Burke, Bob Jones University, and the Rhetoric of Religious Fundamentalism, (Waco, Texas: Baylor University Press, 2007).
- In the spirit of Kenneth Burke's comic critique, this book crafts a vocabulary for understanding separatist rhetoric by extending Kenneth's Burke's notions of tragedy and comedy. I argue that religious sectarian discourse falls outside the tragic or comic frames of acceptance but operates within a third frame—romance. Although neither tragically goaded by nor comically laughing at the dream, the religious separatist seeks to embody “whatsoever things are lovely” in order to woo their lonely Other.

BOOKS IN PROGRESS

- 2009-Present Klandamentalism: The Dysfunction and Violence in America's Most Romantic of Religious Movements.
 Most historians of twentieth-century American politics or religion or law or race or the South or even Florida land development include fundamentalism as a footnoted afterthought. None, however, pull all those stories together into one critical analysis. Quite simply, the Civil War lives on in fundamentalism: a very American and very political conflict wielding religious rhetorical weapons that is not so much South against North, but pro-slavery against pro-equality ideologies fought in Northern cities as well as Southern. This is the story of evangelicalism in the twentieth century without the hagiographic “humble beginnings” mythology. It begins with a “booster” who conducted revivals in mid-size manufacturing towns where labor unrest motivated the business interests to hire a “law-and-order” revivalist who could guilt their employees into obedience. It carries on with a father who was so worried about his trouble-maker son that he started a high school out of a “tabernacle” to keep tabs on him. This booster/father used his local celebrity to sell land at revival-like meetings for a railroad tycoon who gave “banana republics” their sinister reputation. And that's just before 1927.
- 2021-Present One Hundred Years of Women Debating the Equal Rights Amendment: An Anthology, 1923-

2023. Co-edited with Melody Lehn. University of Pittsburgh Press. [Under Review]

After winning the right to vote in 1920, U.S. women did not retreat and fade into the background as satiated national subjects only to reemerge forty years later to burn their bras, protest beauty pageants, and attempt to identify that pesky problem with no name. Instead, many continued the fight and shifted their attention to other means of securing political and legal equality with men. A year after passing the 19th Amendment, suffragist leaders Alice Paul and Crystal Eastman drafted a new constitutional amendment establishing that “men and women shall have equal rights throughout the United States and every place subject to its jurisdiction.” Senator Charles Curtis (R-Kansas) and Representative Daniel R. Anthony Jr. (R-Kansas), nephew of women’s rights leader Susan B. Anthony, first introduced ERA in Congress in 1923. Two years later, Congress held the first series of hearings to consider arguments favoring and opposing the amendment. A century later, both within and beyond the walls of Congress, the long and contested battle over ERA nevertheless persists.

As we approach the one-hundred-year anniversary of ERA’s first introduction to Congress, the time is ripe for revisiting how women across generations have argued about how this amendment—if enshrined in the U.S. Constitution—might reshape and reimagine our democracy. In contrast to narratives that begin with the 19th Amendment and then propel us forward to the 1970s, this book seeks to inclusively account for how women have shaped the ERA debate since its inception through the present day. Ours is an anthology of primary texts, many long forgotten and others previously unavailable, that reveals the nuanced, complicated, and sometimes contradictory ways that women have approached the question of whether we need the Equal Rights Amendment.

This text tells the story Greenville County schools’ desegregation in direct contrast to Greenville’s gentrification and white savior narrative coded in the phrase “integration with dignity.” Focused on the South Carolina Educational Standards for Third Grade Social Studies, this picture book will review the events leading up to the Greenville’s “Read In” at the Main Library—an event which remains ignored at the Hughes Main Library.
